vince would they fit if you removed the center console??

they have memory positions and are fully elecrically adjustable, would be good if you could get all that working in a surf :/

i can sort you some pics out if you want

OK just had a measure of the Lexus seats and they're 22" wide at the widest point across the seat base. My standard Surf seats are 20 3/4" across the same part. So it looks like they could fit, but it will be very tight and you may have to slam the doors to get them to shut because the seats will be touching the armrests.

Posted by: Albannach
Date: 07-02-2010 21:58:35

Is it worth trying to fit them or are there better options if one wanted to change the seats?

Posted by: BigBobE
Date: 07-02-2010 22:03:15

could one bodge (for want of a better word) the door to suit seats??? are mounting points similar???

In the absence of a surf or a lexus at present, that seems unlikely. Although I could get the Corsa fitted with a 2.4TD. It'd go alright once I'd managed to get the nose off the ground and got used to driving with the bonnet open.

Celica, Supra and no doubt MR2 seats fit. Possibly a bit of fiddling to the mounts though.

Oops, yeah, just about. Gonna give it a good run tomorrow.

Had to get the grinder out for the U/Js, they were proper fawked!! propshaft all cleaned, rubbed down and painted too.

Bronze bushes and bearings fitted, just got to look at the brakes now. (and pump that tyre up again!)

Mis-fire problem was that coil plug wires, insulated them now.

Still running on my ECU though, solves the engine check light problem due to the deleted hydraulic engine fan. My engine check light is in a less obvious place than yours, so no worries about it being annoying..

Posted by: Hiroler
Date: 07-02-2010 23:49:47

the coil on the top of the engine with the little bit of rubber insulation missing? or the other coil?

any news on the speedo fault from that guy on the aus forum?
