...as being excessively rotten if you leave people in the shit if they refuse to learn or adapt to a situation they've possibly been in several times? It's like if some plum keeps walking to the same spot on a cliff edge and slipping over, week after week, and you keep pulling them back up as they're clinging onto the edge, what's wrong with just leaving them and letting the chuffs fall after they've done it more than a couple of times?

Just wondered if my stance that they should learn or suffer the consequence was excessive? Surely plain stupidity has to give out eventually and common sense make an appearance?

Sooner or later you need to let them fall a short sharp shock normally helps.

That's what I thought too. We seem to be in the minority though, it would appear.

It's called learning from mistakes as long as it does not end up as a Darwin award.

The great and learned zoologist earnst Mayer classified lots of things in his life, even due to meiotic sexuality, allied with hennigan classification. His stance is to let the clever prevail, and the stupid fail...and in 90 years of zoology he's accepted as always being right. Let the coq kill hisself. :D

So long as letting them fall to a splattery death is a metaphor, let them go. They'll not learn otherwise.

Experience is learning from your mistakes

Wisdom is learning from other peoples

Personally I favour wisdom (Despite having huge amounts of experience) however if you keep stopping the numbnuts from making mistakes then I won't be getting any more wisdom !

Metaphor it was. :D Must admit though, even if that was a real life scenario, third time around they would be dropping.

 Albannach wrote:

Disagree.

Experience suggests that people rarely learn from their mistakes, unless they involve actual splattery death (in which case they very rarely indulge in said behaviour again), or at the very least an imminent threat of splattery death.

You need to leverage this metaphorical cliff hanger into an actual splattery-death cliff hanger. This will increase the relative importance of the lesson to the pupil substantially, and thus help to reduce (albeit slightly) the chance of reoccurring pattern behaviour.

Ideally if, whilst maintaining the threat of imminent death, you could arrange it so that actual splatter occurs in combination with the loss of a minor limb (the left arm is usually ideal), then so much the better. Pain is a proven incentiviser, and limb loss helps serve as a permanent reminder of the lesson in question.

Exactly!

Thats why there is no repect/discipline/ common sense in this country anymore, ever since a 'clip 'round the ear' was outlawed.

"BAH!" agreed Brigadier Vince Leatherington-Smythe, as he shook out his Daily Telegraph in the corner "Bloody good whipping,

Well ive managed...nay, gone out of my way to make everyone as miserable as me today. Mrs GWH left for work a bit sharpish, so escaped. the kids just ignored me !

I did manage to make the courier mad though. He arrived with a parcel for me. I get a few bits and pieces from car builder solutions, as they supply imperial sized hand tools, clips, and other frippery that is hard to get for hummers. I had a garunteed delivery today of an imperial tap and die set. He bought a feckin metric one. The delivery promise is get what you ordered...so i made him go back to kent and get the right thing...the brain dead,moronic,fcukwitted bunch of arse scrapings from a dead tramp.

Posted by: Paul1566

Date: 09-11-2010 16:53:43

If you want imperial try your local john deere dealers.

My mate gets all his bolts, nuts and what not for his hardley daviscum from them.

Other guy gets bits n bobs for his CJ7 jeeeeeeeep from them also.

They do single items as well so you don't have to buy ten when you only want one.....
so i have been told.
