Arrived Calais two days ago
Got French gaz bottle....English adapter won't fully seal
Now on a mission to find ptfе tape to seal the threads

Plus side 31 degrees clear skies plenty of vino heading to champagne region to sample their wares

Nice, eprenay is very nice, avenue de champagne well worth walking down and trying. At the town end is a good bar, serves decent beer and food. Don't forget to try grower champagne, not the famous folks but out in the country and great finds can be had.

Lazy day ajourdhui
Sat outside the van, under a lime tree just chilling in the 28degrees, clear blue sky just south of Toulouse having a coffee.
Opposite is some sort of private park/garden where we've been hearing some strange noises at night time. Today we saw the cause of that noise, half a dozen deer just appeared and watched us, watching them. Then a couple of red squirrels appeared too, had a run around and then they all disappeared back into the trees and bushes.
All this in a relatively built up area near a noisy school.
Not bad for a free stopover ☐☐

We then visited the local boulangerie for our daily baguette and got the best home made baked custard tarts I've tasted.
Shame we have to move on really☐☐

Well tomorrow's another day lets see what that brings

Ain't eurotunnel great?
Checked in exactly 2hrs before final check in
"You can go on earlier train, 10:20 instead of 11:20"

Great ok, brilliant.

Then they delay the departure time by 30 mins

Has the bum stopped twitching after driving past the 'Jungle' ?

Or did you earn a free train trip ?

Did you pick up any prospective UK residents?

Didn't see anything of the residents
At border control we were asked "could anyone have got into the vehicle at all?"

Just a straight "no" and we were through.....makes you think though
